

Fedrigoni 366, designed by TM for Fedrigoni UK, started three years ago as an unprecedented collaboration involving designers, illustrators and photographers from throughout the UK, gathered together by an open call for entries.

Now in its third year, the book has once again managed to pull together hundreds of creative masterminds – introducing 366 to mark 2020's leap year. Following from black and white renditions of the calendar, this edition delves into the exciting world of colour, through the environmentally-friendly range, Woodstock. This year's calendar features a white tip-in for February 29, designed by Supermundane, blazoned with a shimmering holographic foil to commemorate the extra day.

The design brief is purposefully restrictive, inviting contributors to design in one colour and within a specific size. Nevertheless, we are always amazed by the plethora of gloriously different designs dreamed up by our diverse contributors. Interpretations range from numbers to historical figures, from photographs to vector graphics. No two submissions are the same. The result is a gloriously diverse tome. One that will keep you occupied for hours, leafing through the spectrum of colourful pages that make up this year's Fedrigoni 366 Calendar.

February 2nd

- Written the same backward and forward—it's the first global palindrome day in 909 years. Whatever the case, Sunday's super-rare date of 02-02-2020, the only eight-digit global palindrome of the century, has people talking, with #PalindromeDay trending on Twitter
